Many times in elementary schools, snacks are given to help students function throughout the day. If lunchtime is scheduled early in the day, an afternoon snack can fill the gap until dismissal. Sugary snacks offer empty calories that result in a sugar crash and nonproductive learning. Snacks of whole grains and other nutrients can satisfy the stomach and offer the student a much needed brain fuel to complete the day.

"In school classrooms, we often put the cart before the horse. Before we can educate a child's mind we must tend to his bodily needs. A tired, hungry, uncomfortable child does not learn well." -Marilisa Kinney Sachteleben
